Global 6000/Express/XRS

The Global Express is a large cabin, long range business jet designed and manufactured by Bombardier Aviation, whose intention was to achieve the longest possible range at the highest speed from a short runway, with 99.5 per cent despatch reliability. It has a wide body fuselage combining a Challenger cabin cross section with the cabin length of a regional jet; a semi-monocoque fuselage structure with two rear-mounted turbofan engines, low mounted wings, t-tail empennage and retractable tricycle-type landing gear. It can accommodate up to 23 passengers and crew. There is a flight-accessible baggage compartment at the rear of the cabin, and accommodation is heated, air conditioned and pressurised.

Bombardier's Montreal facility is the design authority and manufactures the nose section and carries out interior completions. The rear fuselage, engine pylons and vertical stabiliser are manufactured in Toronto, which is also responsible for final assembly. Mitsubishi supplies the wings and centre fuselage, while Bombardier Northern Ireland designed and manufactures the forward fuselage, engine nacelle, horizontal stabiliser and other composite components. The aft fuselage is built in Mexico.

The Global Express is powered by two rear-mounted 65.6 kN Rolls-Royce BR710A2-20 turbofans with FADEC. Fuel is contained in two integral wing tanks, a centre section tank and an auxiliary tank in the aft fuselage for a total standard capacity of 24,333 litres. An automatic fuel management system balances the quantities.

The aircraft was announced on 28 October, 1991 at the NBAA convention and a full scale cabin mock up was exhibited at NBAA the following year. The conceptual design started in early 1993 and the programme was launched on 20 December, 1993. The first prototype rolled out on 26 August, 1996 and performed its maiden flight from Toronto on 13 October, 1996. The aircraft made its public debut in November that year at NBAA.

Altogether, the prototype and three other aircraft undertook a 2,000 hour, 18 month flight test programme from Bombardier's facility in Wichita. The second aircraft was used for systems evaluation and testing from 3 February, 1997. The third was used for avionics and autopilot testing and first flew on 22 April, 1997. The fourth was first flown on 8 September, 1997, the first to be fully outfitted, and was used for function and reliability testing.

Transport Canada type certification was awarded on 31 July, 1998. European and US approvals followed shortly afterwards in November. Certification was awarded by the JAA on 7 May, 1999 and by Germany's Luftfahrt-Bundesamt on 26 May, 1999. The Global Express entered service in July 1999.

This Index is just the tip of the iceberg
